

How can your early childhood education and care service support your child's transition to school?

Both you and your child's educator at their service play a significant role in supporting a successful transition to school. It's important that your child's individual needs are considered carefully to ensure that the transition process is positive and effective.

There are a range of transition to school experiences that many services can, and do, implement to support children transitioning to school. Some examples include:

- Talking to children about school, and encouraging them to ask questions or voice their concerns
- Arranging visits to local primary schools to meet kindergarten teachers and tour the setting
- Inviting school students to visit the service to talk about what school is like
- Reading stories about starting school
- Including school props, such as uniforms, bags, lunch boxes, and chalk boards in dramatic play areas
- Support children to develop their self-help and social skills through every day routine activities such as meal times when children will practice using lunch boxes and drink bottles
- Providing literacy items such as reading and writing materials in everyday play activities

How can you help your child settle into school?

The following suggestions may help you to support your child to settle comfortably and confidently into school:

- Say goodbye confidently – saying a quick, confident goodbye may help them to feel secure and reassured that you trust that they will be okay at school.
- Label your child's belongings - labelling everything, including clothing, can help reduce anxiety for children, school staff and yourself. At school, children are responsible for their belongings and labels can help them with this.
- Communicate with your child – take time to tell your child what might be happening at school that day, and in the afternoon, ask your child about their day. This is a great way to build confidence, and to find out how they are feeling as they settle in. If you have any concerns talk with your child's teacher, who will provide further insight to their day.
- Avoid overloading your child – when children begin school, they tire easily. It may be worth considering fewer extra curricular activities such as swimming, music or dance lessons, until they adjust to their new routine.

Will your child need out of school hours care?

Consider in advance how you will manage your family's routine and work arrangements during the school term. If you will need out of school hours care, is there a service at your child's school? Will you need it during the term, on pupil free days and/or during school holidays?

It's good to discuss these new arrangements and routines with your child in advance to prepare and support their transition to school and new child care service. Your child's school can provide more information on local services that may suit your child and family.
